SKETCH OF THE ANCESTRY OF HENRY MARSHALL

Born in Virginia in 1780, died in Stanly County, N. C., 1866, his descendants now living in Stanly County as well as elsewhere.

Henry Marshall, who was born in Virginia in 1780 and died in Stanly County, N. C., in 1866, is the ancestor and relative of many Stanly County families: the Lowders, Rummages, Sides, Tomlinsons, Andersons, Carters, Austins, and many others.

He was born in St. James Parish, Mecklenburg County, Virginia, in 1780, the son of John Marshall Sr. and Rebecca (Clay) Marshall. His parents came from what is now the counties of Goochland, Cumberland, and Amelia, all originally Henrico County. After Rebecca Clay and John Marshall Sr. were married, they moved to Mecklenburg County, Virginia, where most of their children were born. John Sr., Henry's father, was a land speculator and bought land in various Virginia counties, eventually branching out into Granville, Wake, and Orange counties in North Carolina. It must have been about 1790 when the John Marshall Sr. family moved from Virginia to Granville County, North Carolina.

Around 1802 Henry received a legacy from his grandfather William Marshall, and in 1803 he bought 466 acres of land along the Neuse River in Wake County, North Carolina. He evidently intended to settle there, but for some reason he sold this land to his father, John Sr., in 1805. At this time his father and brother, John Jr., were in partnership buying and selling land. Their land company was known as "John Marshall, Sr. and John Jr."

On December 20, 1805, Henry Marshall married in Wake County Susanna Tomlinson, a daughter of Richard and Ann (Hines) Tomlinson, of Wake County.

Richard Tomlinson was born in Surry County, Virginia, in 1749 and served in the Revolutionary War. Ann Hines, born in 1750, was the daughter of Richard and Mary Hines of Sussex County, Virginia. Richard died in Anson County, North Carolina, in 1842. Ann died in 1832.

Richard's brother, Thomas Tomlinson, had previously moved to Montgomery County and Anson County, North Carolina. In early 1806 Richard Tomlinson, Henry Marshall and his new wife Susanne, and probably some Bledsoe relatives settled with others in Anson County.

Henry and Susanna Marshall's home in Anson County was not far from that of another Marshall family. This was the family of Capt. James Marshall of Revolutionary War fame, who had come from Brunswick County, Virginia, after the Revolution. There seems to have been no relationship between the two families; if so, it would be very remote for there were many Marshall lines of Virginia as well as in other parts of the country.

Henry and Susanna (Tomlinson) Marshall had:

1. Two little boys who probably died young.
2. A daughter, Rebecca Clay Marshall, born in 1809 and named for her paternal grandmother, Rebecca Clay, wife of John Marshall Sr. This daughter married as a second wife Nathan Rummage of Stanly County and left descendants there.
3. A daughter, Nancy Hines Marshall, born in 1811 and named for her maternal grandmother, Ann (Nancy) Hines Tomlinson. Nancy married in 1832 Richard Carter of Stanly County and they had thirteen children, one of whom was Capt. Robert A. Carter (CSA), born in 1836 and died in 1892. He married Elizabeth Coble in 1871, and among their children were Mrs. Florence Anderson, Mrs. Bess Underwood, both of Albemarle, and Mrs. Lilly Hoffman of High Point, N. C. Mrs. Hoffman, the only child now surviving, is 88 years of age.

Shortly after Nancy's birth in 1811, Susanna Marshall died. Henry, probably leaving his motherless children with their Tomlinson grandparents, went back to Wake County where he married a widow, Mrs. Mary (Hayes) Barker, whom he had known before his first marriage. Mrs. Barker had three small sons: Tom, Laban, and Nelson. Henry brought his new wife back to Anson County and eventually settled on a farm which is on what is now Graham Street in Albemarle, North Carolina. To Henry's two daughters and Mary's three sons were now added four children of Henry and Mary (Hayes) Barker Marshall:

1. Henry Marshall, Jr., born in late 1812, married Sarah Sides. They had five children and eventually went to Missouri, where Henry was killed by renegades during the Civil War. Their descendants are in Missouri and Texas.
2. Joseph Marshall married Nora Hearne, but they had no children. Joseph was Sheriff of Stanly County for 28 years and also served as State Senator. At one time his wife Nora was Postmistress of Albemarle.
3. Benjamin Marshall left no known descendants.
4. Mary Ann Marshall married an Austin of Stanly County and left descendants.

Tradition says that the Barker boys, Tom, Lagan, and Nelson, left home when of age and "went west." We know some of them went first to South Carolina, then to Alabama, and eventually to Texas where there are descendants.

The Henry Marshall family cemetery is now on Graham Street in Albemarle at the site of his former home and farm. In 1955 a granite marker was placed there by some of the descendants. Henry Marshall is buried there and so is his second wife, Mary (Hayes) Barker Marshall. No doubt there are other graves there, but the markers are unfortunately gone.

Henry Marshall died in 1866 in Albemarle, having outlived Mary by a few years. In his Will, filed in Stanly County, he mentions his grandchildren "now living in Missouri," the children of his son Henry Jr. His son Joseph was named executor, and he left his mule to a former slave named Elick.

Henry Clay was born in 1715 and died in 1764. His widow, Lucy Green Clay, born in 1717, married William Marshall, who did not live long after this marriage. He died in 1768. Lucy lived on at the homeplace, finally going to live with a Mosely family in Powhatan County, Virginia, where she died around 1808 at more than ninety years of age. There were no children by William Marshall.

5. Rebecca Clay, who was born in 1752, married John Marshall in 1769. The exact date of her death has not been determined, but it was after 1805. Rebecca was the mother of the Henry Marshall of this sketch, who named his first daughter for her. (Rebecca Clay Marshall, who married Nathan Rummage in Montgomery County, North Carolina.

There has been much research on the Clay name. A Clay Quarterly is put out by Mr. G. M. Clay of Houston, Texas. Mr. Robert G. Clay, an archivist with the Richmond State and Historical Library, has collected much information on the Clays. He is a descendant of Thomas Clay, born 1745, a brother of Rebecca Clay Marshall. The compilers are most grateful to him and to Mr. G. M. Clay for their help in tracing and proving these Clay lines.

THE MARSHALL ANCESTORS OF HENRY MARSHALL (1780-1866)

Alexander Marshall (1676-1743)

Alexander Marshall was probably from England and no doubt a man of some means, as he acquired before 1700 large tracts of land in Henrico County, Virginia, in the area of the confluence of the James and Appomattox. This section was settled early by families who came up the river from Jamestown and Williamsburg. The Eppes, Worshams, Jeffersons, Ligons, Farmers, Moseleys, and others were all neighbors and relatives.

Around 1702 Alexander Marshall married Elizabeth (Worsham) Ligon. She was the daughter of Captain John and Mary (Wynne) Worsham of Henrico County and the widow of Thomas Ligon, who died young, leaving her with three or four children. Elizabeth and Alexander Marshall had several children. His Will provided for his land always to go to the eldest son in each generation, and it was his son William who inherited directly from him.

Alexander and Elizabeth Marshall were both born in 1676 and both died in 1743. As late as 1955 their double headstone stood on the left bank of the Appomatox at a headland junction of the Appomatox and the James on land belong to Mr. Richard Eppes. "Mrs. Sallie Short of Dinwiddie, Virginia, who is an Eppes descendant and who knows so much about that whole area of the State, says that the graveyard has fallen into the River and that both gravesite and stone are gone--something that has happened over and over again in Virginia where graveyards were close to the Rivers." (From a letter to Mrs. J. B. Carter, Jr., July, 1976, from Mr. Robert G. Clay of Richmond, Virginia.)

According to family tradition Henry Marshall was a second cousin of Senator Henry Clay (1777-1852) of Kentucky. In earlier days, no doubt, everyone knew the relationship and could trace it, but later generations tended to scoff at the tradition, since many people are inclined to try to "tie in" with a prominent name.

This research has proved that the relationship was there. Henry Marshall's mother, Rebecca Clay, was a first cousin of John Clay, the father of Senator Henry Clay. Her children were therefore second cousins of the Senator. We really did not set out to prove this relationship but found it in our search for Henry's ancestors.

1. The immigrant Clay ancestor was John Clay, called The Emigrant, who was in Charles City, Virginia, as early as 1624. His wife was named Ann. He was the ancestor of prominent Clays of Virginia and Kentucky, including Semtor Henry Clay, General Green Clay of Revolutionary War fame, Marcellus Clay.

2. Charles Clay, son of The Emigrant, born 1638, married Hannah Wilson.

3. Henry Clay, son of Charles and Hannah, born 1672, married Mary Mitchell.

4. Henry Clay, son of Henry and Mary, born 1715, married Lucy Green. (His brother John Clay was the grandfather of Senator Henry Clay, which makes Henry's children first cousins once removed of the Senator.)

Lucy Green was the daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Marston) Green and was born in Virginia. The Greens and Marstons were old Virginia families, and these surnames have been carried down in the Clay family as first names for sons.

Henry and Lucy Clay had ten children, according to the Family Bible in the State Historical Library in Richmond, Virginia:

Henry Clay, Jr., born 1736
Charles Clay, born 1740
Samuel Clay, born 1743
Thomas Clay, born 1745
Abia Clay, born 1747
